Argentine wines from the Mendoza region

Chardonnay acquires tropical tones from warm areas, especially mango, banana, pineapple, peach and watermelon, sometimes cream, honey and caramel. These sensations are then confirmed in the taste, in addition, fullness dominates with a creamy and buttery feeling on the palate. The best wines have a balanced acidity and a dense to oily consistency with a buttery finish. In gastronomy, wines can be combined with fish, seafood, white meat and pasta, they go well with soft cheeses with white mold, pâtés and white sauces. It goes well with thicker soups, white meat dishes and cream sauces. In particular, trout on butter in combination with Chardonnay is unique.

Pinot Gris wines are expected to be full, soft, high extract, orange in hints associated with the impression of honey and milder bread. The characteristic Pinot Gris is golden yellow in color, sometimes with a pink tone, has a neutral aroma with fruit tones, its taste is full, soft, with a high extract, with a higher content of glycerol and alcohol. The wine is harmonious, supple, with a subdued effect of acids, the aftertaste is long-lasting. In the aroma and taste we can look for orange, grapefruit, apricots, nuts and honey, smoky and buttery tones, spices, botrytic tones, breadcrumbs, apples, pears, mango, flowers, goat's lip, but also cocoa, vanilla or beeswax.

The typical Merlot is a ruby to dark garnet color, the shade depends on the size of the harvest. The aroma is delicate, with tones of overripe black currant. The taste shows a low acid content, fullness, softness, suppleness, long aftertaste. The alcohol content of wines from ripe grapes is around 12.5%. In the aroma and taste we can look for black cherries, plums, blackberries, compote, figs or roses. As it matures, Merlot acquires a creamy-vanilla tinge. Merlot wines can be drunk alone, without food. They are served with various delicate pâtés, venison or venison ragout, veal kidneys, foal meat, dishes with a strong tomato flavor, feathered game dishes or Emmental.

The Malbec variety comes from France, where it is also traditionally grown, but the largest vineyards with the Malbec variety can be found today in Argentina, where 71.5% of the world's area of vineyards with this variety is located. Varietal wines from ripe grapes are delicate but expressive, rich in tannins, with an exciting aroma of plums, tobacco and violets. The typical wine has a deep red color with a touch of purple and a fruity bouquet, reminiscent of black currants, mulberries, raspberries, cherries, plums, but also forest fruits, violets, laurel, jasmine, dark chocolate. We can also find spicy and earthy tones of cedar wood, green peppers, but also leather. The taste is again fruity and spicy tones. You can serve wines for more pronounced modifications of beef and grilled specialties, it has a stylish effect on Argentinian steak. They will also pair blue cheese.
